GANDIA BLASCO was born in Ontinyent (Valencia) in 1941. It started with the production and manufacture of blankets, an activity that continued for 40 years with considerable success. With the arrival of José A. Gandía-Blasco to the company, the activity began to diversify. In the early 1990s, the company started with the production of other textile products, such as carpets and bedspreads. With the help of Marisa Gallén and Sandra Figuerola, designers, the image of the make was reshaped and the first products with a strong design component were launched. During the years to follow, the brand settled in the textile market due to the exclusiveness and innovation of the products. The success of the carpets was followed by the commercialisation of sheets, duvet covers, bedspreads, cushions, etc.

In 1996, GANDIA BLASCO launched the first outdoor furniture collection, designed by the architect Ramón Esteve with the participation of José A. Gandía-Blasco himself. It is the collection 'Na Xemena', which continues to be the icon of the company. The gap in the outdoor furniture market eventually took the company to focus their central activity on this branch. In 1999, as the company became the property of José A. Gandía-Blasco, the hierarchy of the firm was completely restructured. Though keeping the textile section, the garden and terrace furniture collections became the heart of the production.

Experience, tradition, sensitivity. New ideas which look to the future without losing the value of the past.

Because we believe that a well designed sofa or armchair has an enduring beauty which makes it immune to the passage of time. Such pieces have an ecological tenacity due to the valuable features that have been maintained, and because the sofa or armchair improves the more it is used.
